MADRAS: The Presidency of Madras (a.k.a. Madras Province and known officially as Presidency of Fort St. George) was a province of British India;
At its greatest extent, Madras Presidency included much of southern India, including the modern Indian State of Tamil Nadu, the Malabar region of North Kerala, Lakshadweep Islands, the Coastal Andhra and Rayalaseema regions of Andhra Pradesh, Ganjam district of Orissa and the Bellary, Dakshina Kannada, and Udupi districts of Karnataka; The winter capital was the city of Madras (renamed Chennai 1996), the summer capital Ootacamund

BOMBAY: The Presidency of Bombay, another province of British India, was established in the 17th century as a trading post for the East India Company and grew to encompass much of western and central India; At its greatest extent the Bombay Presidency comprised the modern Indian state of Gujarat, the western two thirds of the state of Maharashtra, including the regions of Konkan, Desh, and Kandesh, and N.W. Karnataka state; It also included modern Pakistan's Sindh province and the former British territory of Aden in southern Yemen; Bombay Presidency consisted partly of districts directly under British rule and partly princely states, these each ruled by their traditional ruler but with a British governor
